CLEAN AMUSEMENT

No Grafters With the Parker Amusement Co

Mr. Marshall, Mo., Democrat-News has this to say of the company which will furnish the attraction for the carnival and old country fair here next week:

"The Parker Amusement Company, which has furnished the features for the big street fair, has proved itself to be a meritorious organization, and nothing but praise is heard for the various attractions presented. The Parker Pike has drawn like a magnet and up and down the amusement thoroughfare thousands have strolled nightly. As the week progressed the throng of 'Pikers' increased, a testimonial that the shows were pleasing the people.

"One thing to be commented upon favorably is the cleanliness of this amusement organization. It is not only one of the largest of its kind on the road, but it is likewise the cleanest. Not an off-color or suggestive attraction is to be found on the Pike. The looking for racy shows have been disappointed, but those who appreciate wholesome amusement have found it in numerous and diversified forms.

Changes For K Of P.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 28.—Supreme Commander Boiler, in a speech at yesterday's session of the biennial convention of the Improved Order of Knights of Pythias favored extension of the membership of the order to the larger cities of the country; payment of the per capita tax semi-annually instead of quarterly and the adaptation of insurance rates to those of the fraternal congress. Reports submitted indicated that the organization is in a healthy financial condition.

A High Ad

The advertising sign and tailless life of Ennis, the manager of the opera house and real estate agent, attracted a great deal of attention yesterday afternoon. They certainly were an innovation in the way of advertising.

The trial of Lee Anderson at Lexington on J. B. Haggins' farm, Elmendorf, came to a sudden close by Henry Robinson, colored, taking the stand and confessing the crime. Anderson was immediately acquitted.

BIG SALE

Of Merchandise Now 'On at Church Hill.

Church Hill people are again afforded an opportunity of attending a big reduction sale, Mr. J. M. Adams, the merchant at that place, having inaugurated one yesterday, which will last one week. In addition to Mr. Adams' large stock of merchandise, which is now ready for the trade, he has an unusually nice and well assorted stock of millinery goods, all the latest patterns, from the largest millinery house of the South. He has distributed bills announcing that he will sell at lowest prices and invites an inspection. Mr. Adams' stock is complete this season and he is offering some rare bargains. Remember that this sale will run for ten days only, from Sept. 29.

DEATH FROM DIPHTHERIA

Epidemic Threatened at Lafayette—School Dismissed.

Diphtheria has appeared at Lafayette and the public school at that place was dismissed the first of the week. A child of Mr. Wm. O'Brian died of the disease. A child of Dr. J. J. Ezell was stricken, but it is thought to be out of danger. Prof. Thom, principal of the school, has gone to his home at Cerulean.

UP IN SMOKE.

Barn and Much Tobacco Destroyed by Fire.

A tobacco barn, containing about 1500 pounds of the weed, belonging to Leander Hancock, of near Roaring Spring, was destroyed by fire one night last week. Mr. Hancock lost his entire crop and the loss falls heavily upon him.

Marriage Licenses

County Court Clerk Prowse has issued two marriage licenses this week as follows: G. H. Petty to Miss Minnie Follard, Elmo Maddox to Miss Roda L. Henshaw.

The candidates after filling their appointments in the Gordonfield district, will go to Pembroke today and speak at Casky tonight, which will conclude the canvass in South Christian. The next speakings will be at Fairview and Perry's School House Tuesday, October 3

ALFALFA AND CORN SPECIAL

Stops Forty Minutes and Farmers Hear Talk.

TESTS IN THE COUNTY.

Train Proceeds Northward, Making Another Stop at Crofton.

The Alfalfa train arrived yesterday morning a few minutes late and made a stop of forty minutes.

About 300 farmers and others interested in farming were at the train. Two cars were soon filled with those who came to hear and a fourth lecturer addressed the overflow crowd at the rear end of the train.

In one car Alfalfa was discussed and in the other corn was the subject.

Lectures of course centered in Alfalfa and much information was imparted.

This plant is the most prolific of any species of grass grown in this country for forage. That it has been known to produce as high as twelve tons per acre in one season can hardly be understood by a farmer who has never seen it growing. To him it seems incredible. Even on the thin rocky soil of New England one field of eight acres averaged four tons an acre one year at the first cutting. The crop was cut four times that one season from that field.

The eagerness with which it is devoured by live stock of all kinds, whether as pasture, cured hay or ensilage is remarkable, but not more remarkable than its strength and flesh-giving properties.

That the stories told of alfalfa in the West were first received coldly in the central West and Eastern States will be remembered. It is then literally true that the plant has successfully fought its way to the very shores of Maine, in spite of prejudice and opposition, and in spite also of the somewhat unusual difficulties always attending "the first stand."

Several farmers of Christian county have already given it a trial.

R. S. Wootton, LaFayette, began five years ago and now has 25 acres, from which he takes four tons of hay an acre.

Mr. J. W. Keeling, of Fairview, has in 2½ acres, sown August 15, and he had with him at the train samples of the growing crop 12 inches long. Other farmers now raising it are as follows:

J. F. Garnett & Son 4 acres.
R. F. Rives, Casky, 18 acres.
R. H. Rives, Longview, 22 acres.
Noel Rives, Longview, 12 acres.
J. R. Caudle, J. J. Garrott, J. D. Clardy, W. T. Fowler and a few others are experimenting on a small scale.

Commissioner Vreeland expressed himself pleased with the reception so far. By actual count the speakers have addressed 5,050 persons since they left Louisville. The crowds at Pembroke and Hopkinsville were 200 and 300 respectively. Another stop was made at Crofton about 11 o'clock.

Attention! K. of P.

It is earnestly desired that every member of Evergreen Lodge, No. 83, Knights of Pythias, be present at their lodge room next Tuesday morning, Oct. 3rd, at 8:30 o'clock, to attend in a body the open session of the Grand Lodge at the Tabernacle.

$100,000 MAY COVER IMPROVEMENTS

L. & N. Will at Once Make Some Great Changes Here.

A SWITCH ENGINE.

Capacity of Yards To Be Greatly Increased.

This paper mentioned in Thursday's issue the contemplated enlargement of the L. & N. station and erection of car sheds over the track, corner of Ninth and the railroad.

Now we are able to give probably more important improvements, and they are to be made at once. Superintendent John Logsdon spent several days in the city this week and was busy as a bee all the time, looking into matters connected with more systematic and quick handling of freight. The freight business at this point has assumed such proportions that Agent Hooe has to have additional facilities for transacting the business of the company. A few months ago the business done here approximated $15,000 per month. Now it reaches about $50,000 a month.

Superintendent Logsdon while here put in a switch engine with a competent crew. This was an absolute necessity. Mr. Bernard Hooe has been made switchman. His duty will be to superintend the placing of all cars along the side tracks and keep the main track clear. Mr. Sam Fleming, one of the best and most careful engineers on the road, has charge of the engine and is assisted by Mr. H. Harris, fireman, and Mr. E. T. Cofer. Heretofore all switching of cars had to be done by the local and through freight engines.

Thursday the Acme Milling Company shipped out a train of 19 cars loaded with flour, and yesterday the same mill and the Crescent Mill sent out a train of 23 cars loaded with their products.

The civil engineer of the road yesterday began work surveying for additional track beyond the bridge for two sidetracks. The company cannot get along without more siding. An office will be built beyond the bridge and all conductors of freight trains will receive their orders from that office. This will do away with freight trains stopping on this side of the river, thus leaving the streets all hours open to the public. The company is also to build another tank beyond the river. The company will put its stock pens nearer the river and increase its trackage greatly on this side the bridge. It will also make great changes in the tracks leading to the rock quarry up the river. An additional watchman is to be placed at the Ninth street crossing, and Mr. Logsdon has directed Mr. Hooe to keep Ninth street well sprinkled. He wants everything about the station kept as free from dust as possible.

All these things are to be done as soon as practicable. To do this the company will be at considerable expense—probably $100,000, to say nothing of the enlarging of the passenger station and building car sheds next year. As we stated in Thursday's issue that Mr. Logsdon has seen the necessity of these improvements but he has had so many other things demanding his attention that he has not been able to look into matters here sooner.

Mr. Hooe is now using the offices in the new freight building as well as the new storage department. It was his intention to throw the building open to the inspection of the public next Tuesday, but Superintendent Logsdon told him to postpone it on account of the carnival. So Tuesday night, Oct. 10th, will be the time for everybody to gather and be shown through the building.

ALL IS READY FOR VISITORS.

Pythian Brotherhood Coming Tuesday Four Hundred Strong.

LOCAL KNIGHTS ELATED.

Prof. H. Clay Smith Chosen as a Representative to the Grand Lodge.

One of the largest crowds that has ever attended a gathering of the kind was on hand Thursday night at the meeting of Evergreen Lodge, No. 83, Knights of Pythias. Three new members were admitted and the regular run of business was attended to.

The committee which has in charge the matter of making arrangements for the Grand Lodge to hold its annual session in the city next week, beginning Tuesday morning, reported that all arrangements had about been completed, and that from information at hand they were expecting about four hundred Knights, but there might be many more.

It is the intention of the Committee to have the Uniform Rank of the order act as a special reception committee, meeting all trains and showing the visitors to the places where they will stop during their stay in the city. But the committee wants every member of the lodge, who can, to meet every train and assist in the entertainment of the guests in every way they can.

It is earnestly desired by the lodge and by the Committee on Arrangements that every member of Evergreen Lodge, who possible can, will be present at the lodge room Tuesday morning at 8:30 o'clock, as it is the plan to have the lodge attend the open session of the Grand Lodge at the Tabernacle in a body.

There will only be one open session during the meeting of the Grand Lodge, and that will be the opening session on Tuesday morning at 9:30 o'clock, the program of which we published last week.

On Tuesday night the banquet will be given at the lodge room. This promises to be a very enjoyable feature of the meeting. The visiting and local Knights will attend. This and the open session will be the only social gatherings to outsiders during the session, as the Lodge desires to get down strictly to business, as there is much to be attended during the meeting here.

At the meeting of Evergreen Lodge Thursday night, Mr. Geo. E. Randle, who was several weeks ago chosen as one of the representatives from the local lodge to the Grand Lodge, resigned the honor, stating that his business relations were such that he could not attend. Prof. H. Clay Smith, of South Kentucky College, was chosen in his place, and with the other four members chosen to represent Evergreen Lodge. Prof. Smith is a Past Chancellor and a very popular member of the local lodge.

Mr. Hooe will not say much about his arrangements for the opening—only that he will have a band of music for the occasion. So you will have to do somewhat on your imagination. There is no telling what Mr. Hooe will do, for he is perfectly delighted with his new quarters, and well he may be. A more convenient and perfectly appointed building can not be found on this division of the road. Superintendent Logsdon and Agent Hooe have the gratitude of everybody for what they have already done for the city as well as the contemplated improvements to be pushed to a rapid completion.

James H. Lander.

James H. Lander, whose illness was mentioned in a previous issue of The Journal, died Wednesday night at the home of his nephew, W. M. Harrison, at Salubra. Death was due to typhoid fever and kidney trouble. He had been ill only about two weeks, but for several days his case had been regarded as hopeless. Mr. Lander was about 63 years of age and was a member of the Methodist church and a veteran of the Civil War. He was a good citizen and leaves a host of friends to mourn his death. The interment occurred in the Lander burying ground, near Little River.—Pembroke Journal.

The yellow fever outlook continues auspicious. The recent heavy rains at New Orleans are believed to have been a blessing, inasmuch as mosquito larvae were carried into salt water where they cannot exist.

JOHN W. TERRELL

THE PARSON'S
SUBSTITUTE.

Judson's Corners was going to church. For nearly four months the roads had been almost impassable. Hacksiders were many,
for it meant a day's work to reach Judson and off spring wagon and barnes.

Mr. Bliss smiled a smug little smile and gently tapped his hymn book with his glasses. "It will be a good day for my spring missionary sermon," said he. "I thought so. I wonder if Amos Billings has sold his town lot yet." And he naturally counted the tenth.

As he turned to go back into the church he became aware that some one had slipped around the east corner by the sycamore. He saw that the newcomer wanted to speak to him and he waited.

As the man approached the clergyman noted his appearance.
He was a small man about his own build and poorly dressed, except for a small side, a few small shaves, an old acquitment of rags. His hat, having lost any trace of its original shape, is best described as slouch. It was pulled down over his eyes.

"You are Rev. Mr. Moore P.
Bliss, I presume," was the very elegant remark of the stranger.
And what was more wonderful to the astonished minister, he took off his hat and bowed like a Chesterfield.

"Ah—yes. What can I do for you?" he replied. He was going to add "my good man," but stopped.

"I would like to speak to you in your study for a few minutes. I won't keep you long. I see Hiram Jenkins' gig is the first on the hill and he won't be here for a few minutes yet. Of course—if—"

"Oh, certainly, certainly. Come right in. I am always glad even at the eleventh hour to show a brother the way; the way to a better life. Just follow me."

As they walked through the empty little church with its bare wooden pews, the minister nudged his brain. "Who can he be?
His face seems familiar and I am sure I have seen him before. A lost sheep come back to the fold, I judge. Well, we'll see; we'll see."

They walked up the three steps to the pulpit, then crossed it and went through a small door at the back which led to the study. Mr.
Bliss closed it carefully and motioned his visitor to a chair.

"Sit down, my friend," he said, as he went to the table and laid down his glasses and books.
"What can I do for you?"

"Just this, old dunder," said the stranger, pleasantly; "take off your clothes."

The astonished old man was reaching for his handkerchief when he heard the remarkable demand, but he dropped his arms and looked up, too amazed to speak.

"Why—I—don't—" but the words died in his throat as he suddenly saw a six shooter not twelve inches from his nose.

"No 'why's' and 'don't's.' Do what I tell you and hurry about it, too. I'll give you fifteen seconds for your coat and vest and as many more for your trousers. And I want your shirt and collar and tie and shoes."

Resistance never entered his head. He slipped off the coat and vest and even the collar and tie but he stopped. A sound reached them. It was the Jenkins family entering the church. A quick hove showed in the good man's face; he'd call.

"Yell and I'll finish you."

Rev. Mr. Bliss was ready for anything now. He was fully prepared to do handspins down the church aisle, or to climb the bell-rope, or to run fifty times around the altar, all the while saying: "The devil was chasing his way round the stump;" to the tune of a gun banging after him at every corner. But he wasn't prepared for what happened.

"Now I'll give you two minutes to get the whole outfit on yours truly."

So, to the accompaniment of some more oaths, everyone of which made him jump, the clergyman obeyed. If the congregation could have seen through the study door a strange sight would have met their gaze; their own beloved pastor in his underclothes, tying a black cravat on a minister.

ing a gun recklessly near the good man's head.

Then dragging him to a corner between two best cases, the pen-do-person dumped him on a stack of old hymn books. He picked up a pad and scribbled on the table and put them on the hymnbook's shaking knees. "Now, I'll preach your sermon for you, and, to keep your mind off your trouble you can write: 'Mary had a little lamb' three hundred times. Every one you're shy means a hole through you. Don't try the window. It's nailed on the outside. Queer you didn't notice it. Now be good," he added, cheerfully.

The congregation had begun to wonder where the minister was. Hannah Hotchkiss, who peeped audibly to Mrs. Hawkins.
"Perhaps Jane Bliss was took bad and he couldn't leave. If he doesn't come soon I'll take the short cut by the creek and go over."

Her words were cut short by the opening of the study door. A stranger appeared. He was greeted by the usual whispering and uplifted brows. When he had carefully closed the door he stepped forward and closed his eyes a minute as if in prayer.

Then he looked around and smiled, a beautiful pious smile.
In a confident voice he said: "Dear young friends—I have noticed the absence of you here to-day—I regret very much that our dear friend and brother, Mr. Bliss, cannot be with us. Ahem—Ahem—" Echo from the study. "I have just returned from the p—, from foreign lands, and have been asked to take charge of the service for our absent brother, and to preach the annual missionary sermon." Groans from the study, followed by a loud and violent sneeze.

"From Greenland's icy Mountains! Rise and sing," said the stranger, loudly.

The Judsonites were quickly on their feet singing for dear life.

Next came the announcements.
The card had been left on the open Bible. "Service this evening by the pastor. Subject—I was naked and ye clothed me." Noise from the study.

"Rise and sing: 'There is a Green Hill.'" Judson sang "The Green Hill" and sat down. Fat
Mr. Hobbs was puffing.

The stranger went on: "A recital by the choir on Tuesday evening at the home of—" Another sneeze from the study.

"Safely Guarded! Every one stand."

"Best if I can," wheezed Mr.
Hobbs.

The hymn finished, the stranger continued: "Prayer meeting on Wednesday evening at the usual hour. There will be no collection on that evening as this is the day for the annual missionary offering, and a large amount is requested."

More sounds from the study.
"Sing," he fairly shouted, "sing number three hundred. Three hundred," he repeated to the study door.

With what breath they had left, they sang. "Thank goodness, he didn't say to stand," sighed Mr.
Hobbs.

Then everything went well. The sounds in the study ceased. The stranger read a chapter from Job and then announced his text:
"Cast your bread upon the waters." With a beaming smile he went on: "Now, we will have the offering. Will the deacons please pass the baskets?"

Four old men moved squeakily up the aisle. They passed the basket back and forth through the pews and the click, click of the money brought a smile of satisfaction to the missionary's face. The deacons placed the offering at his feet and turned to go back to their seats.

From where he sat he saw the faces of the congregation suddenly change. Smiles changed to a horrid stare. They seemed to see an apparition.

He turned and beheld the pastor standing in the doorway beside him clad from head to foot in the most atrocious rags and looking scared and weak.

The stranger rose quietly and smiled. He laid his revolver on the desk and with a deft movement removed his wig with which came the sideburns. The people gasped.

"Keep your seats, my friends.
No need for anyone to rise now."

And he pulled up his gun. "I am sorry this has happened. No one regrets it more than I. A few minutes dear brother." And taking the clergyman in the pulpit steps, he made him sit down. "There's that better. Now I leave you." With a smile he went on: "Allow me to thank you, kind friends, for your generous offering. I need it badly." And stooping he conveyed the contents of each basket to his pocket. "And by the way, Mr. Bliss, I want to thank you for this handsome suit. I hope you didn't catch cold. I shall now turn the rest of the service over to you.
I regret that I cannot leave the cash."

Then he lightly jumped down from where he stood and swinging his gun carefully in one hand he walked slowly and smilingly down the aisle.

"I see so many old friends here.
One feels better when he has company in misery. Let me see; still weighing butter light, Josh? I told you once it wasn't honest.
Better take to preaching, ha, ha!
I will have my little joke. And I do believe that Nancy Burr finally landed Dan Willis. Well, Dan, you deserved a better fate."

He walked a few steps down the aisle, and went on: "Say, Lem, do you remember the day you and I stole the parson's white horse and sold him and split even? And Deacon Greenfield, didn't you get yet? Yes, now I remember, you did and we gave you ten dollars to forget it. My! Those were good old times. Well, I must be going.
Hiram, I'll borrow your sorrel mare as far as Summerville station. I'll just have time to make

EFFECT OF AGE PENSIONS.

Subject Is One Which Is Commanding Attention—Many Countries Legislate.

Whatever opinion one may hold as to the economic effect of the various forms of old-age pensions which are now in operation in the world, whether voluntary or part of our governmental systems, the subject is one which is commanding an increasing attention at the hands of legislators and students of social science. The association of the subject with the extreme programmes of socialism has tended to divert the interest of many who would otherwise give the problem the study which its importance deserves, though it is a singular fact that the present German law of compulsory insurance, which is the basis of the old-age pensions in that country, was enacted through the influence of Bismarck, who hoped by thus forestalling the socialists to check the spread of that party, says the Philadelphia Ledger.

Many of the countries of Europe have legislated in this direction, and the pensions take varied forms, being limited in some cases to special classes of wage-earners, such as miners and the like. In these instances the state has assumed a responsibility in the premises by regulating the voluntary insurance associations of the workers, by compelling payments to such funds or by giving its guarantee and aid.

In America the subject has never been seriously considered as coming within the scope of practical or desirable legislation. The nearest approach to governmental old age pensions is the retirement on part pay of certain officers who have given their lives to the public service, but the extension of the system to the general civil service has always been promptly negated whenever seriously proposed. On the other hand, the system has been applied to a larger extent than is generally appreciated by railway and other large corporations. To these must be added the vast array of voluntary beneficial, friendly and insurance schemes by which the people of this country are seeking to solve the problem of support in their declining years.

Tuesday Oct. 3, is Registration Day in all city and town precincts. Polls open 6 a. m. to 9 p. m. Only chance to register unless you are sick or absent.

Two more suicides occurred in Louisville Wednesday. Both were middle-aged workmen.

It is said Dave Smith, of the Fourth District, is about to reconsider his determination not to run for Congress again next year.

M. Witte has reached St. Petersburg and was given a great ovation.

Engineer Shonts has gone to Panama with a party of officials constituting the Advisory Board. Senator Morgan declined to go, saying he saw no good to come from the junket.

Secretary Taft and party, who sailed from Yokohama September 17, arrived at San Francisco September 27, beating the record several hours. They came on the Korea.

One hundred tons of dynamite in a vessel sunk in the St. Louis canal will be exploded by batteries twelve miles distant. It will be the greatest amount ever blown up at one time.

E. K. Renaker, Democratic nominee for senator in the Cynthia district, will ignore a request for his resignation an account of the $3,500 judgment secured by Miss Whitaker. It is also said that he will settle the judgment without taking an appeal.

Three Democratic editors are candidates for Governor in Georgia. They are Clark Howell, editor of the Atlanta Constitution; Hoke Smith, editor of the Atlanta Journal, and J. H. Estell, editor of the Savannah News.

Scythia Ferguson, of Bardstown, Ky., has secured a $1,000 verdict from W. H. Kennedy, an aged Iowa farmer, in a breach of promise suit. The old man paid promptly and said he was glad the jury gave her something, adding that he only broke off because he was afraid an old man like him couldn't make such a fine girl happy.

The tobacco growers of the white burley district have at last launched their long-talked-of association, and now the fight against the tobacco trust is on to a finish. The Executive Committee met and perfected the organization, which was named the Burley Tobacco Growers' Association. The capital stock is placed at $1,500,000, of which $250,000 is held by growers themselves.

FASHION'S FANCIES FOR FALL

Furs and Feathers, Plumes and Ribbons Galore.

EVERYBODY DELIGHTED

Milliners Keep Open House to Show Latest Designs.

"All the world loves a lover," (probably), but every woman loves a hat, while man admires the face under it. Thursday was "ladies' day" in Hopkinsville. The dry goods clerks might as well have had "a day off." It was "opening day" with all the millinery stores in the city and each had its throng of femininity from early morning until the closing hour at night. "Furs and feathers," plumes and ribbons, smiles and exclamations of delight everywhere.

The feminine sex had already spent, spent many hours consulting magazines trying to evolve from the hundreds of suggestions something that would look well over each individual face. But all original ideas vanished when the first millinery store was visited Thursday, and when "ye lady fair" had made the rounds she was so bewildered by the many exquisite displays of Fashion's ever-variable mood that, for the life of her, she couldn't determine what kind of a hat father or husband will have to pay for.

She will "do some tall studying" in the next few days. She has an ideal—everybody has. She wants to see what her ideal has selected, and whatever that may be "goes"—or something very much like it.

Women's hats, to men, are about all alike—and as to style, about as unchangeable as the laws of the Medes and Persians, for the price at his home is always the same. It has been said that a young woman, is harder to please in the selection of a hat than anything else in this wide world—not even a husband excepted. From the day the patience-exhausted trimmer tries it on for the last time to its transfer to the cook or house-girl it never had been exactly what she wanted.

If a woman would not wisely she would listen more to the suggestions of milliner and friends than most of them generally do. We can't "see ourselves as others see us"—which, being translated, means what becoming to a brunette "looks horrid" on the pretty blonde, even though the size and contour of the face be almost identical. So don't imitate your ideal too closely, but listen to what your milliner and friends have to say.

Some of the more observant men are rejecting over the apparent passing of the broad shovel, half-moon, brella ladies' hats. We don't blame them, for but few ladies look well under the huge scoop affairs. They suggest snow-shoes "for summer wear" on the head.

"The style" for the season seems to be leaning to the turban, so much in vogue a few years since. 'Tis not a real turban, but just the hat to keep the full face from looking fuller and the thin face from looking thinner. For elder ladies, what might be called the half-scoop will be generally worn. One whom we believe to be au fait in such matters says that this shaped hat for more advanced ladies is the most perfect that has been brought out for years, being "neither gay nor sombre, neither loud nor too subdued." Properly trimmed it even looks "chic" and attractive over a younger face.

And then there are other shapes innumerable, colors indescribable, and "style" quite questionable. Each one seeming to be a style of

SOME SUIT FACTS.

The young fellow is usually a "smart dresser," knows what is what and is very particular about his clothes.

MARRIAGE TANGLE.

Three Brothers Wed Daughters of Father's Wife.

A special from Toledo, O., says: One of the most remarkable marriage tangles ever known and presented to the authorities in probate court when Edward and Fred Metzger, twins, made application to marry sisters. This in itself was not strange, but when the clerk was preparing the papers it was learned that the elder brother of the twins had married a sister of the two prospective brides.

A look at the Journal showed that in May, 1904, Albert Metzger had married Ida Miller, the third sister. While the people in the court were having a good laugh at this Edward spoke up and said:

"Let me tell you something that will set you to thinking deeper. Our father is the husband of the girls' mother."

This is the story: Lewis C. Metzger married Mrs. Christina Miller. Metzger had, as stated, three sons, two of them twins. Mrs. Miller had three daughters. Now the daughters became the brides of the sons. In other words, Metzger is the father-in-law of his stepdaughters, and Mrs. Metzger is the mother-in-law of the stepsons.

And still the wonder does not cease. Mrs. Metzger was married four times. Her second marriage was to the brother of her present husband, but by that union she had no children.

Here are some of the puzzles to work out: If your two brothers married sisters of your wife, what relation would your children be to your brother's children? Or, what would they be if you and your brother's father took for his second wife the mother of the girls who are now the wives of the three sons? And still further. What would they be if the woman your father married, the mother of your wife and of your brother's wives, was the widow of your uncle?

The boys have stopped figuring on the puzzle, saying that if they have children the relationship will be so mixed as to baffle deciphering.

RURAL ROUTE LISTS

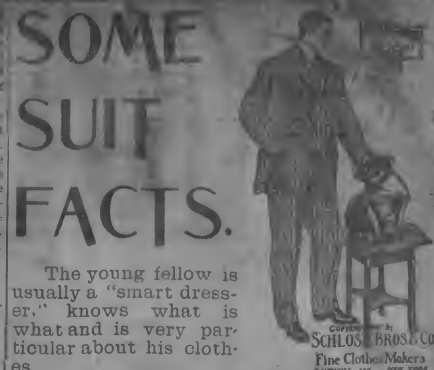

Must Not Be Posted in Post-office Lobbies.

As the result of an order, all lists of names of rural route patrons which have heretofore been posted in the lobbies of the various offices of the State, will be taken down and none of the lists will be replaced.

The Postoffice Department at Washington has held that the placing of the lists invites the use of the postoffices as an advertising medium. It has been the custom of the various postmasters to secure the names of all of the patrons on their routes and to revise the lists from time to time. Some people have taken advantage of this by copying the postoffice lists and using them in distributing advertising matter. The order was issued in accordance with an order from the postmaster General in June and provides for the destruction of all of the present lists.

An English Mecca of American Tourists

Old Quaker Meeting House in Whose Yard William Penn Is Buried.

AMERICAN tourists who love unspoiled old-world corners will find Buckinghamshire, England, peculiarly rich in quaint and historical buildings, which have, perhaps, additional interest to some from the fact that they are so little known. This is somewhat strange when one considers that Buckinghamshire can certainly lay claim to be an English home county. Low very few of the many thousands who visit Windsor or Burnham Beeches, ever realize that scarce six miles away is to be found the most perfect relic of the old Puritan day. For here on the crossroads two miles from the bustling town of Beaconsfield, the Quakers erected one of their oldest and most important meeting houses known as Jordans.

Situated in a deep hollow, and so securely hidden by its thick belt of ever-uriant lime trees it is not to be wondered at that would-be visitors are frequently found vainly searching for it when at the very gates. Perhaps it was not altogether without purpose that the old Friends chose this secluded out of the way spot for the erection of the meeting house, for, if remote now, how much more remote must it have been when it was first built 200 years ago.

During the year 1687 a momentary peace was granted to the Quakers by the declaration of indulgence. It was then that Jordans was built. They do not seem to have been long left undisturbed, as one frequently reads of soldiers rushing in at their meetings, and the Friends themselves being made to pay heavy fines, or even being thrown into prison. To protect their women from persecution, the gallery in which they sat, was provided with sliding shutters, which were hastily closed in the event of an intrusion. Thus were dame and damsel safely concealed till all danger was past.

Before the present Jordans was built, meetings were held in a farmhouse on the top of the hill close by. The building is still standing, known as Jordans' farm. It probably took its name from the fact that its then owner was called Jordan. It was not until 1687 that it was decided to erect a meeting house in the little plot of ground acquired some 16 years previously for a burial ground. On October 17, 1688, the first meeting was held at "New Jordans." Here it was that the great founder of Pennsylvania, William Penn, used to worship, and here, after all his travels, trials and tribulations, he rests in the peaceful little sanctuary near his first and beloved wife, Gulielma.

And Jordans seemed to have been the rallying point of all his voyages. Perhaps the fact that he first met Gulielma Springett there in a measure accounts for his deep love of the place, though he was not married at the meeting house, but at King's farm, Chorley Wood, where he lived for some years. The farmhouse, still standing, is much the same as it was in Penn's time, though the curious old window and door of the room where the marriage ceremony was performed is concealed from view by a newer building.

Constantly one reads of Penn returning to Jordans, either to attend meetings, or on the sad occasion of the funeral of one of his children or friends. Surely then it is more fitting that he should lie at Jordans than be removed to a mausoleum at Philadelphia, as some Americans advocated a few years ago. It is even said that it was necessary at one time to place a guard over the grave to prevent the removal of his bones by stealth.

Finally the agitators contented themselves with erecting a large statue of him in Philadelphia, and raising a small headstone over the grave, sorely against the wishes of the Friends. Jordans has somewhat aptly been called the "Westminster Abbey of the Quakers" for one reads in the register of burials the names of many of the leading Friends of long ago. Isaac Pennington, whose step-daughter married Penn; Abraham Butterfield, Thomas Bivwood, Milton's greatest friend, who was also one of the first trustees of the meeting house; Joseph Rule, who was known as the "White Quaker," from his practice of always dressing in white. There was a heavy fall of snow on the day of his funeral, which gave rise to the remark that Friend Joseph was the "White Quaker" to the last. Many a.e. the quaint stories told about these old Friends. It is said that William Penn's father was so irate at his son's refusal to doff his hat to any man, that one more than one occasion he hid all William's headgear to force him to give in. But Penn stuck to his principles. Even in the presence of Charles II. he remained covered, whereupon he removed his own hat, observing that it was the custom at Whitehall for only one man to wear his hat at a time.

One "frivolous" Friend was fond of sport, and used to hunt in pink. His dress was denounced as being gay and "unseemly," and when he died (it is believed from a fall in the hunting field) it was with great difficulty that his friends obtained leave to bury him at the meeting house. The story runs that it having been decreed that his body should not be permitted to pass through the gates, the coffin was lifted over the palling.

At the present time the meetings at Jordans are held only once a year, usually at the end of May, or as the Friends themselves quaintly express it, the first day of the fourth week of the fifth month. The old sect has died out, and but few Friends live in the immediate neighborhood. Nevertheless the meeting is largely attended by Friends who come from afar and by members of other denominations. Nor is Jordans left alone or forgotten during the other months of the year, for the visitors' book shows how many come from all parts of the world to see the old place. Most are perhaps Americans of whom the caretaker has been heard to say with some New York "Americans come from all parts of America and New York."

The beautiful surroundings of this little Quaker building cannot but charm all who visit it, especially in the spring time when the beech woods are covered with their first young green, the ground carpeted with primroses or wild hyacinths, and the air laden with the scent of white violets. A haven of building, that for more than two centuries has stood intact, in spite of the many changes in the outer world, and the controversies that have raged within its very doors. If only the walls could speak!

GEO. GRIFFIN ON TRIAL.

Charged With the Murder of Henry Warren in 1895.

DEFENDED BY BELOND.

Griffin Eluded Capture Until Some Time Last Fall.

The Case of the Commonwealth against Geo. Griffin, charged with the murder of Henry Warren, was called Thursday and trial entered into, taking up all of the court's time. In the spring of 1904 Griffin shot Warner, while the latter was at work in his field, near Fruit Hill. Warner lingered several weeks and died from the effects of the wound. Griffin disappeared, but was captured in the fall and placed in jail here. He was indicted for wilful murder. The examination of witnesses consumed Thursday and a part of yesterday morning. John Feland, attorney for defendant, began his argument a while before noon, but owing to the illness of Jurymen M. D. Hord, court took a recess until after noon. It was expected that the case would go to the jury late yesterday afternoon.

JUDGE BLACK

Appointed County Judge in Caldwell County.

Gov. Beckham has appointed W. P. Black, of Princeton, to the office of county judge of Caldwell county to fill out the unexpired term of the late Judge W. S. Randolph, who died several days since. Judge Black is the Democratic nominee for the office at the approaching November election, and was strongly endorsed for the appointment. Judge Black is the father-in-law of Mr. James West, of this city.

He will travel for the old established produce house of Peter Heber, of Evansville. Everybody wishes "Jesse" great success. He will make his initial trip next Monday.

Hartford Gets a Move.

Hartford will soon present the most attractive appearance of any little town in Western Kentucky, piled streets and concrete gutters; with all store signs removed from across pavements and stile blocks taken away, our little village will present a most attractive appearance. The hand of progress is moving in our midst and evidences of its uplifting work are to be seen everywhere. The most favorable feature of the whole business is that every citizen seem to enter heartily into the push, although in some instances it amounts to almost a hardship. There can be no doubt but that Hartford is a "coming" town, and she certainly deserves all that is in store for her.—Herald.

"Wife in Name Only."

"Wife in Name Only," which will be the attraction at Holland's Opera House, October 5, is a four act comedy drama from the pen of Frank Knight, dealing with both country and city life, the scenes being laid in New York City and Long Island. The attraction has met with unbounded success all along the line, the "Standing Room Only" sign being always in evidence. The cast is made up of many favorite metropolitan players, including the famous young actor, Garland Gaden, and Miss Laura Lorraine, the noted singing comedienne. The company carry their own special scenery, which is said to be equalled by no organization on the road.

SIMPSON JURY

Will Try The Russellville Rapists.

Circuit Judge Sandidge at Russellville overruled the motion for a change of venue in the case of W. R. Fletcher, charged with criminal assault on Mary Gladder. A special venire was ordered from Simpson county. Troops from Hopkinsville and Bowling Green are guarding both Fletcher and Guy Lyon, accused of the same crime.
